Coal and the Tariff.

Free trade is the natural condition, and tariffs are levied for the unnatural demands which overtake a government. This is the rule of the great mass of every free people at the present day, and it needs no argument. It is not the doctrine of the Republican or of the Democratic party, but of the people. Our present tariff, which all admit to be burdensome, as is any taxation for the purposes of paying a debt of the past, is made necessary in its general features by the war which was foolishly and wickedly directed against the nation. The responsibility for that war and consequently for our debt and the burdensome taxation to which we are subjected, is clearly established at the door of that party which calls itself Democratic. The duty of paying our national obligations faithfully, and consequently the immediate responsibility for all measures looking to that object, is with the party which saved the Union and now conducts the administration. That party has bravely performed its duty so far, during the too popular cry of oppressive taxation which is set up by the very party which made this taxation necessary. As extraordinary crises demand extraordinary measures, the Republican party levied a tariff, to procure the revenue by which to pay off a debt contracted to defend us against Democratic assaults. Now these same Democrats come up and tell us that free trade must be adopted or the people will be ruined and impoverished. They do not mean free trade when they claim it. They are no more favorable to free trade than the Republican party. But with their usual carelessness of the national honor, they do not wish us to pay the debt that we contracted to punish them, and free trade is a mere hobby with which to ride into repudiation. As between the infidel and dishonor, it is time the Democratic party understood that the people are for the tariff. As between Republican and Democratic free trade, the people do already understand that, while the former is practical, honorable and consistent, the other is merely a party catch-word with which to attract the loaves and fishes. Wherever they are directly interested, as in the Pennsylvania coal districts, the Democrats are just as favorable to protection as the Republicans. Indeed, in this one item the Democracy are the chief supporters of the tariff. Mr. Asa Packer, Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, is head and front of the great coal monopoly, and his strongest friends are in those places reaping the greatest profit from the protection to coal.

Having thus stated the popular rule to be free trade, and that in this respect there is no party distinction having an honest foundation, let us say that there are errors in the present tariff which can be judiciously, and should in justice, be modified. The chief error of the law we believe to be the tax upon the importation of coal. It should be the rule as far as possible in framing tariff regulations to place low guards about those productions which are limited to certain sections. We have not the same excuse, in a protective point, for taxing coal that we have for taxing the productions of skilled labor. Coal is limited to a few localities, skilled labor may be employed in every State. But laying aside the idea of protection, which is not the general idea of the tariff, let us consider that of revenue, which makes it necessary. It is not judicious, in framing a tariff, to enhance the value of articles in our market to such an extent that fraud can reap immense harvests at the expense of honest men. As a notable example, while the tax on whiskey was $2.00 the government received less revenue than after its reduction to one-fourth that sum, at the same time that distilleries were made [illegible] the importation of foreign articles. Coal is the principal commodity under this head. Foreign coal is practically excluded from our markets. The tariff on coal is $1.25 in gold per ton. If we were to import it from Nova Scotia, the freight would be probably as low as from Philadelphia, perhaps lower. It is reported that the Picton, Nova Scotian coal dealers and miners say that if the United States will abolish the duty on coal they will land a plenty of it in our seaport towns at $4 a ton. They could undoubtedly do it, as the price at their mines is $2.75 gold.

The effect of this tariff on coal, then, is to prevent importation. The government derives almost literally no revenue from it. It protects the coal monopolists of Pennsylvania, to whom the people are subject more effectually than to any tyrannical ruler. When the market is full, they can get up a strike among the miners, stop work, and hold their surplus for a rise. Take off this tariff or reduce it to a revenue basis and this monopoly would be broken up, coal would be cheap, and we should hear little of these speculative fluctuations. We are not of those who think that this would make any great difference with the foreign supply of coal; it would still be small. The moment the tariff were abated, the Pennsylvania miners would discover that they could sell at reasonable rates. We believe our own country can supply itself with coal as low as can Nova Scotia, still making great profits, and this is what they should do.

The recent corrupt combinations in Pennsylvania have finally awakened the people's attention to this subject. As a proof that it is not a partisan measure, nearly every influential Republican paper is demanding the modification or repeal of this coal provision in the tariff. Congress will no doubt consider the subject on re-assembling, and correct this mistake. We can have cheap coal without expense to the revenue, and the people demand it.

The Ellsworth American very appropriately calls attention to the fact that in the near future a great opportunity will be offered agriculturists, hotel keepers and others at Mount Desert to make money. The present season develops the growing popularity of that locality as a summer resort, giving promise of great improvement in that respect before the lapse of many years. All the Island lacks is accommodations for shelter and entertainment to draw to its scenery many thousands every summer. Its location, its climate, its scenery, are all that could be asked; scarcely any of the most popular watering places equal it in all natural attractions. Mount Desert is destined to grow in importance, and for those who have property in that quarter, or have money to invest, we believe that now and there is the opportunity to lay the foundation for unusual prosperity. Nice houses are needed, markets supplied with fresh meats and foreign fruits will be found convenient, and gardens for the supply of berries, vegetables and domestic fruits will bring great profits to the proprietors and add much to the picturesque character of every other kind of property. Mt. Desert has been behind-hand as a popular seaside resort only from lack of enterprise to place it where it properly belongs. People will not leave the luxuries of city life altogether for a long sojourn. They demand the comforts of life at least, while camping out for their health or pleasure. We hope next season will witness a deserved improvement there in many respects. The onward will speedily come.

For the Whig and Courier.

Winterport and Bucksport.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

Mr. Editor—

I live in Bangor, on —— street, and sometimes loan, in any, or my credit, which is the same thing.

Not long since Mr. W., of Winterport, called on me and submitted my old. His statement was as follows: I have purchased a lot on the other side of the stream, and want to build a house worth $25,000. I can expend $15,000, without encumbering the property by mortgage or otherwise. Now if you will agree to loan me your money, or your credit, to the amount of $10,000, as soon as the house shall be finished, I will execute to you a mortgage on the whole premises. I examined his site, found it a desirable one, knew the building would be an ornament to the city, that it would increase the taxable property besides adding a new and respectable citizen, with his family, to our population. As it did not concern me whether he could expend $15,000 without encumbering the premises, or not, and I was not to be called upon until the building was finished, and, then for but $10,000, to be secured on the whole property, I did not ask for proof that he could furnish that amount or more if it was to come from.

I gave him my verbal promise that I would accommodate him.

Before the bank in question went into execution, Mr. A., from Bucksport, called at my place of business, and after bargaining for a pardon for his indiscretion, and hoping I would not consider his remarks as in any way an intermeddling with my own business, said: My dear sir, which you wish to injure your credit by loaning Mr. W. $10,000, or your name for that amount, to build a house for? You have already loaned your money and credit to several other parties to aid in the construction of new buildings in this city, and if you continue so to do you paper will soon be discredited in the market. Now I have a project in my mind, whereby a house of greater cost than Mr. W.'s can be built, rate upon your own credit, and mansion without any aid from you, except, perhaps, a small sum to finish it. I will tell you how it is to be done. My friend A. has promised to contribute enough to build the a house to cost $30,000. The site I wish them to purchase is lovely! better I think than Mr. W.'s. Now why not save your credit, to aid in the building of houses at the north end, thereby increasing the valuation and population of the city, and leave Mr. W. to build his own house, as I expect to build mine, or go without?

After assuring Mr. B. that I was glad to see him, and that no way felt offended at his interest in private matters, I answered him, as nearly as I can recollect, as follows: "Mr. B., if I may trust that I own a large amount of property here, valued by the assessors at $60,000, though it would sell today for $80,000 under the hammer. My paper is out to Mr. M. C., Mr. B. & P., Mr. E. & M., and others, to the amount in all of $300,000, secured by mortgages, with all of which I am perfectly satisfied except, perhaps, on the loan to Mr. B. and P., not large however. Upon all these loans the interest has been promptly paid and the property mortgaged greatly increased in value. Now pray tell me, Mr. B., how my credit can be affected by loaning Mr. W. $10,000 on such security? The inference to be drawn from your implication that the loan to Mr. W. would affect my credit is that it were to be a hazardous investment, which I do not for a moment admit. It is a loan, perfectly secured by mortgage.

Now, if it will not affect my credit, Mr. B., to make this loan to Mr. W. for an enterprise which will tend to increase labor, wealth and population in our city, why should it affect your credit? If your friends will build you a beautiful residence, worth $80,000, let them band it. No one will be more grateful than I. And the pecuniary benefit I shall be lead to my own home the more it will increase the value of my own property. Whether it will be a good investment for them, or not, is not for me to decide.

"But I think you said the site had not been secured. Are you sure you can get title? The proprietor may not conclude to sell. Though so, will your friends fulfil their promises? You say you can count on $15,000 from individuals, and they tell you that the Well known Gas Co., the Working Man's Relief Society and The Eagle Works Association—if the stockholders of the corporations will agree to do—will supply the balance. I have no desire to say aught to discourage you, Mr. B., but you rely upon glorious uncertainties.

"I know you will say you are morally certain that you can secure enough to take a board and shingle your building, and the cash off one square room and a bed room, so you can move your family in: but if the promises of your friends fail, how do you expect to complete your castle?"

"O, well, if it should come to that," said Mr. B., "rather than have such a bare wall as uncouth stove pipe sticking out of my window, and so much rubbish to meet your premises, I feel sure my pride, if nothing else, would compel you to loan me the balance you need if it required $20,000."

"Well, really, I am glad you are so frank. Nevertheless, I have decided to keep my promise with Mr. W., and to be sure of one new house, and hope your friends will keep their promises to you. The more such enterprises the better houses we must have. Mr. W. will not affect you if your friends are sound; if not, and you have confident inducement in the way of security, when the proper time comes I may aid you. But to the certainties are preferable to uncertainties.

"I wish you good day, sir."

E. B.

To the Editor of the Daily Whig:

In a recent number of your paper, "enterprise," in referring to the proposed railroad between Bucksport and Bangor says, "If the capitalists of Bucksport wish to plant some of their loose change in one objects, intimating that capital invested in such a road will be safe. Bucksport capitalists have not been in the habit of planting their money except where it has promised profitable return. "Enterprise" labors to show that a road to Winterport will prove a profitable investment and invites the citizens of Bangor to plant some loose change" in it. His article suggests a comparison of the merits of the two roads proposed as investments. It is claimed that a road to Bucksport of uniform gauge with the roads leading out of Bangor northward and north eastward and connecting with them will receive during the winter months a large amount of business. Even before the river is closed in the fall, lumber dealers will not be obliged to hang up their shipments by water, nor will they feel obliged to get rid of all their lumber before the river closes, thus crowding it to market. Availing themselves of the facilities offered for shipping from Bucksport, they can also put into market early in the season certain kinds of lumber which command a higher price and a readier sale, than later in the season.

There must necessarily be transported over such a road during six months of the year a large amount of freight and the local travel over such a road will be no small item, and will be certainly increasing as the road is extended Eastward it can be easily demonstrated that the income from passengers over the section from Bucksport will be a very considerable amount. I do not wish to occupy too much of your paper and will only suggest to "Enterprise" and all others interested that they examine the matter thoroughly before doubting that a road between Bangor and Bucksport will not pay.

Extended to Winterport to be in the "Enterprise" accords a narrow gauge road to be run in connection with the Maine Central will prove a powerful auxiliary to all the business of Belfast, and Searsport. I think it will be evident to any candid mind that the proposed Winterport and short road must depend mainly upon passengers for its income, and I will have to carry them at such low rates as will be no means for stockholders. If gentlemen will examine into the subject and estimate the cost of a road as they can easily do from data to be procured, they will be surprised by figures that are an investment of $1,000 per mile by Bangor, in a road running west merely to save a small sum to farmers, which are probably higher now than warranted by the business—but expensive way of getting the communication, which they need with a Winter Harbor.

A story is current in Washington that at the time General Sickles came while being discussed in a Cabinet meeting previous to his appointment as Minister to Spain, Attorney General Hoar and Secretary Fish suggested that the General co-operate with the Colonel much to urgent seriously interfere with his questionable at the Spanish Court. Secretary Rawlins and Postmaster General Creswell, in reply to their objection, remarked that at the time they were in favor of the measure. After a brief silence the President solved the question by appointment by saying he, too, was in favor of the measure at the time it was framed.

Secretary Fish gives as a reason for the seizure of the Spanish gun boats, which are being built in this city, that they were intended to relieve the Spanish fleet now doing coast duty around Cuba, and permits the fleet to join with a Peruvian war. He says he does not intend to permit the gunboats to leave our waters, but if they do leave without his permission he will send after them a force which will compel the Dept. and compliance authority to be exerted.

Railroad Meeting in Bucksport.

BUCKSPORT, Aug. 9.

A meeting of the voters of Bucksport, held this afternoon, it was unanimously voted to raise money to defray the expenses of a survey of the route of the proposed railroad to Bangor; also, to instruct the Selectmen to petition the Legislature of the State for authority to take stock in and to loan the credit of the town in aid of the road.

Speeches were made by some of the most responsible and conservative men of the place and a general enthusiasm is manifested in favor of the project.

The determination is to push things. The thing is sure.

Suspected Foul Play.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 9.

While the remains of Gordard Gorbach, late of this city, were being taken to the cemetery today the coffin was taken in charge by the coroner, at the suggestion of the agent of a New York insurance company. The body was examined and then allowed to be buried.

The agent states that the deceased had been insured for a few thousand dollars, for some years, and that recently a party fraudulently representing himself as the deceased who it is claimed was ill at the time, applied for, and obtained an additional insurance, to the amount of $27,000. Foul play is suspected, and the matter is being investigated.

Railway has been accepted and Mr J M Lunt has been appointed in his place. We are informed that Mr Emery has gone to St John to attend to matters connected with the railway there. A NEW ENGINE. The Maine Central train of cars from Dexter Junction, yesterday, was drawn by a new and beautiful engine, built by the Portland Company, and painted and ornamented at the Maine Central Co.'s shop, at Waterville, named "A. D. Lockwood," in honor of a Director of the road. This engine in all important particulars is said to be as good as can be made and beautifully finished and ornamented.

LARCENY—ARREST AND RECOVERY OF THE MONEY. As Mr. Frank S. Foss, of Charleston, was trying on a suit of clothes at Wheelright and Clarks, yesterday, a man named Nelson Wiltshire entered the room where Foss had laid his pants containing his money, and took from the pocket ninety four dollars, and made off with it. Being suspected, he was followed by Mr. Wheelright, jr., who saw him hand a roll of money to a man to keep for him. The roll was found to contain fifty dollars, and upon arresting Wiltshire about thirty dollars were found upon him, leaving some fourteen dollars to be accounted for.

AS HER RUBBERS OUGHT TO LIGHT. It will be recollected as having been mentioned in connection with the George murder case, that the story of Hannah Currie, of Orrington, was twice entered in by and goods stolen therefrom, the last time being two or three days after the murder was committed, and before its discovery, at which time the pistol with which the murder had been committed, as also a variety of other goods.

The search of the house of the Smith's at Oak Point for the goods of Capt. Atwood brought to light other goods than his, and among them a pistol, which Mr. Currier identifies as the one stolen from him. The Smith's asserting that they purchased it of Herbert T. Nickerson, who was arrested as a confederate of theirs in the Atwood robbery, a warrant was issued against him on complaint of Mr. Currier, and a search of his house revealed the presence of shoes, cloth and other articles which Mr. Currier identifies. Nickerson made a clean breast of the matter, and says the robberies were committed by Jim and a boy named Norwood, of Orrington, and he was arrested yesterday and brought to this city where he is now awaiting examination. Mr Currier having patterns of the prints stolen, found them made up into dresses at Nickerson's house, and of three pairs of shoes to be found one pair which had not been worn, but which had the shop mark.

ACCIDENT IN KENDALL'S MILLS. A correspondent informs us that while Nehemiah Parker, of Kendall's Mills was driving, yesterday afternoon his horses took fright, the swing him from the wagon. A heavy truck wagon passed over his stomach. The doctors think the injuries will prove fatal.

The auroral lights at Springfield, Ill., as we learn by telegraph, was a startling and sublime phenomena. The sky was perfectly clear. Professor Pearce, of the observatory of Illinois University, had charge of the observations, which were made near the city. A hundred photographs of the aurora were taken by Mr. Black, of Boston. When the total obscuration took place, the heavens and earth presented a scene of awful sublimity. A brilliant amber colored corona appeared around the sun and moon, shooting rays of light outward in all directions, when the whole horizon was illuminated with light of the same color. The planets Mercury and Venus—and a number of fixed stars, were distinctly visible, but no planet orbs between Mercury and the sun were discovered. A brilliant rose-colored flame, or protuberance, was noticed on the western limb of the sun, describing the period of total obscuration.

The phenomenon known as "Bailey's beads" was also distinctly witnessed. This phenomena is caused by the refraction of light. It is produced by the moon's edge, or bulk, at the time of the corona, or halo, at the time of total obscuration, was occasioned by the moon's atmosphere. At Madison observations were made by Professors [illegible] Yale Observatory, Alexander Winchell, New York; David Murray, of Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J., and [illegible] Dudley University, Nashville, Tenn. The instruments made use of [illegible] spectroscopes. One of them, [illegible] was provided with means for accurately measuring the diversions of the [illegible] from the sun and corona, or [illegible]

State Agricultural College—First Annual Examination.

We had the pleasure of being present at the first annual examination at the Agricultural College in Orono, which occurred on Thursday of last week, and we can but wish more of the friends of the institution, as well as many who ought to be its friends, had been there also. All who so acquainted with the history of the College know that the past year was its first and trial year, and this examination an era in its existence. Thus far the experiment works well, and the result is not only as favorable as could be expected, but as successful as the most ardent could desire. It is a State institution, and the whole State has an interest in it, and as will be seen, has been fairly represented in it. The young men composing the first Freshman Class were:

W H Carr, Jr., Houlton.
E F Fuller, Bangor.
W E George, Orrington.
B F Gould, Waterville.
E J Haskell, Saccarappa.
G L Macomber, Durham.
C C Norton, Oldtown.
W B Olson, Portland.
F W Rollins, Orono.
M S Storey, Camden.
E D Thomas, Brownville.
B F Watson, Lovell.
G O Weston, Madison.

The studies of the year were Book-keeping, History, Physical Geography, Botany, Horticulture, Natural Philosophy, Algebra, Geometry and Rhetoric.

The exercises of examination were mainly upon Geometry, Horticulture, Natural Philosophy and English composition—the examinations in the other branches having been observed at the close of the first and second terms.

The students in a protracted examination displayed a promptness, accuracy and self-possession, complimentary to themselves and their Professor. It was evident there had been no cram for a display, but an examination in the truest sense, of the studies of the year, in which each member of the class must stand or fall for himself, and we are happy to say none fell. In particulars were the demonstrations in Geometry all that the most critical could wish, in reciting that hard and good work had been done.

In the department of practical Botany the class have gathered and analyzed, more than one hundred and fifty different plants, which has united pleasure with study—one of the fundamental ideas of the institution.

The examination was closed with an exercise in English composition and select declamations, which were above the common merit—as good as is generally expected from Seniors, not Freshmen. Without stopping to mention each, we will only say that the parts of George and Sargent for their distinct articulation, correct expression and unobjectionable manner were worthy of special commendation.

A friend present offered a prize to that member of the class who should be judged the best speaker at the close of the next year.

Remarks expressing great satisfaction and of an advisatory character, were made by Ex-Gov. Coburn, Hon. F. S. Lang, Rev. Mr. Dyke and Prof Johnson of the Board of Trustees, N. Wilson, Esq., Hon. Mr. Norton of Oldtown, Rev. W. Jowall and Rev. S. Beler.

Among the impressions made by the examination were, 1st, That the College is exceedingly fortunate in its Professors. Prof. Fernald sustains the well-earned popularity he had gained elsewhere as a thorough disciplinarian, accomplished scholar and practical teacher,—the right man in the right place.

2d, That the College is also exceedingly fortunate in its first class of students. It was a great pleasure to hear the repeated testimonies from Superintendent Johnson and others of the gentlemanly deportment and almost unblemished moral character of each member of the class. We can hardly see how the institution could have been more fortunate in the character or average ability of its first class, who have won the confidence not only of the faculty but of the community in which the College is located.

3d, Another impression confirmed is the wisdom and success of the daily exercise system by each student upon the farm. It has worked good as a sanitary measure, so that the young men come back of their year's study with better health than they began.

It has worked well as a pecuniary measure by which students have been able to meet a large part of their expenses, thus reducing the costliness of an education which is also one of the objects of the College. It has worked well as a moral measure, for the students have made it a pleasure, so that it has been a relaxation from study without the evils seen in some other institutions. It has worked well for the College and the State. It was stated by the Superintendent that the proceeds by the prompt and willing assistance in the work of the farm had aided the State in many ways. The State had aided them. The regulations work well for all parties concerned, and it is a success.

All present were many and more convinced that the College is in a position long needed among the institutions of learning. We knew of no better place for any young man to spend four years in acquiring knowledge and mental discipline. Certainly of the State's generous [illegible] the completion of [illegible] ed handing [illegible] and the Trustees are fortunate in their selection of future Professors as they have been; it must become the College of the Commonwealth.

Let the people visit it and see if it is not the right institution in the right place, under charge of the right men.

Yours,

P. S. We have omitted the names of W P Wingate, Esq., Hon. Lyndon Oak and Secretary Goodale of the Board of Trustees who were present during the day.

GOVERNOR'S HOUSE FOR THE INSANE,
Near Washington, D. C., Dec. 12, 1868.

THOMAS H. DODGE, Esq., Worcester, Mass.:
Dear Sir,—I take pleasure in bearing testimony to the excellence of the Union Mower. It is one of the first manufactured (in 1862 I think) has been in use at the Hospital ever since, and has mowed about forty (40) acres of grass twice each year. This machine does its work well, and if kept clean, its mechanical construction is superior to most other Agricultural machinery with which I am acquainted, and its liability to get out of order reduced to a minimum.

The New Union Mower, which you furnish with the last Mower, was in constant use during the last haying season, and gave entire satisfaction.

The Schoolboy's Vacation.

His trunk was packed for leave before:
The blood coursed quickly through his veins;
The hours lagged slowly o'er and o'er,
As counts the captive in his chains;
His task was finished—day delay;
The eagle in his upward way!

Horses o'er morn illumed the skies;
The clock had only rung out three;
It was an early hour to rise,
But not an early hour for thee.
O, boy! for in thy dreams all night,
How loomed the promised land in sight!

O, boy! I would that free as thou,
I, too, might sweep o'er hill and plain;
Without a wrinkle on my brow;
Live over life's young morn again;
And part with trunk and rise at three,
And start at eight, along with thee!

A Freedmen's Hymn.

A Southerner who is curious in his observations as to the effect of freedom on the ordinary field-hand freedman, says that in no way does Sambo "feel the oats" of liberty more than in his devotions, and in support of his assertions sends the following, which he says is in many quarters a favorite hymn to Harper's Magazine:

We's nearer to the Lord
Dan de white folks, and dey knows it;
See de silver slippers on 'em?
Walk up, darkeys, neat de guard,
Bet a dollar he don't close it.

Walk up, darkeys, fred de gate;
Hark! de colored angels holler,
Go 'way, white folks! 'spects too late:
We'se de main color; white
Till the trumpet sounds to follow.

Hallelujah! Panks an' praise!
Long enuff we're bornecour crosses:
Now we's in scoperior race,
We's swipe to hobben afore he hosses.

From the Galaxy.

THE SHADOW OF FATE.

"Horrible! horrible!" I exclaimed folding the paper and fanning myself. "What in the world coming to? and why doesn't the stage coach arrive? Dear me! why did I buy this paper?" I looked at it remorsefully. It was an illustrated affair that I had purchased in mistake. One might imagine, from a glance at its ferocious wood-cut, that one-half the world was murdering the other half. There was Miss Sinclair stabbing her false-hearted lover, St. George de Vivian; Mr. Snaggs throwing his twelve children down a well, with Mrs. Snaggs looming up in the distance in an attitude of prayer; Herr Bold the bigamist, drowning himself to save his body from the outstretched fists of his six wives, who stand on the bank of the river; Miss Amelia Snoggin poisoning her aged mother to get that yellow barege dress; Miss Ann McKay, shooting her third husband for turning up just after she had married the fourth; Miss Soldcody butchering her entire family; an asylum for aged ladies blown out of their beds by a charge of gunpowder, placed under it by their ungrateful adopted child, etc. All this and a great deal more served to entertain me at the little inn while, whiling away the arrival of the stage.

I was in no enviable frame of mind. I had just left the grave of a friend, and was hastening home to rest, for I was not strong, and the scene I had passed through affected me considerably. I felt nervous and unstrung; I could not banish from my mind the particulars of my unfortunate friend's death.

He had been murdered—handsome, warm-hearted, accomplished George Herbert—just after he had been married six months and retired to the family estate to devote the rest of his existence to his wife.

I was sitting one day in my office in New York, thinking of George—for we were dear friends—when suddenly he entered.

"I thought you were at the Grange," I said.

"I left there two days ago," he replied.

"What are you doing here?" I asked.

"My wife's birth-day will occur next week," he said gaily, "and I have come to New York to see you and buy her a present—something handsome," he added. "I have drawn a large sum from the bank, and—"

At this moment I was called away, and George, seeing me busy, passed out, saying, 'I will return directly.' He did not, however, return, and the next morning I received the news that a dead body had been picked up in the North river. It was George Herbert, robbed and murdered!

No clue to the murderer could be obtained. I took the body to the broken-hearted wife, and remained a day after the last sad services had been performed; and now, with a heavy heart, I was leaving the lonely house and returning to New York. I felt that the impression of the scene would never leave my mind. The cursed newspaper seemed to bewilder my already over-excited imagination still more, and I took a drink from a pocket flask to revive my drooping spirits.

"What can keep the coach?" I muttered.

The day was exceedingly warm, the sky painfully blue, without the vestige of a cloud to relieve it in motion. The silence which prevailed filled me with melancholy. A crow (bird of evil omen) flew screaming over my head. Everything seemed to contribute to depress my spirits, and I turned with an impatient sigh and began walking to and fro. The dusty, yellow-rutted road stretched vacantly out of sight, and the trees seemed to languish under the oppression of the cheerless brightness of the day. Again and again, notwithstanding my efforts to avoid it, my thoughts would turn to my murdered friend. His death was enveloped in mystery. My only solution of it was, that he had been seen to draw the money from the bank, and been conveyed to some lonely place, where he was robbed and murdered, and his body thrown into the river. The detectives could not discover the perpetrator of the deed.

"It is too late now," I murmured; "the murderer of George Herbert will never be discovered."

The crow, which had perched upon a tree, seemed to comprehend my words, for with a contemptuous croak it flew off, leaving me to watch it until it became a mere speck in the sky, when I resumed my meditative promenade, until at last the sound of wheels attracted my attention.

"The coach at last!" I muttered, as the paper fell [illegible] upon the paragraph, [illegible] article describing the murderer of [illegible]

At the same [illegible] the hearse arrived, and the body of the unfortunate man—

I laid my hand on his arm.

"No more," I said nervously, "I have just left the grave of a dear friend who was buried yesterday; and—"

A harsh laugh from the driver caused me to shrink back and close my eyes involuntarily. I did so, the funeral cortege glided past me as in a dream, so vividly that I could not disabuse my mind of the belief that I was not in a stage-coach, but in a hearse. As rapidly as the idea presented itself to my mind, it was dismissed by the remembrance of the little inn, where I had left the greater portion of my baggage.

"I will walk back," I said, drawing a flask from his pocket and presenting it. "Thank you, sir, and in return, allow me to offer you mine. Going to New York?"

He laughed merrily.

"Oh, no," he replied, "I am going to—That is, I shall turn off and make a tour in an opposite direction. You—"

"You look like a New Yorker," I said, and he was a medium-sized, well-built man, with that peculiarly dashing, showy appearance which seems to especially belong to New Yorkers.

"Yes," he said, with an air of easy familiarity, "I was born there, but am going abroad—going abroad for my health," he added, laughing at his jest.

He laughed particularly well, with a manly look that was contagious.

"How long will you remain?" I asked.

"I don't know," he replied. "I am desirous of leaving at once, but I may be detained—I can't say," shrugging his shoulders, "but I hope not. A favorite place, and I hate things to [illegible] but a change of air and scene will do me good; so I make the trip."

He paused for a moment, and then added, "Your face is familiar. I [illegible] but is not your name Hawkins?"

"No; Rawdon," I replied—"Henry Rawdon."

"You are evidently a physician?"

"I am."

"Have you resided long in New York?"

"Yes, a number of years. What is the matter with your thumb?"

I was wrapped in a plaid shawl and several times, when the coach lurched over the rough road, he had accidently struck his head against its pointed end, and received between his eyebrows a contusion which sounded like an oath.

He [illegible] at my question. He continually, and seemed to enjoy [illegible]

"A dog bit me," he growled. "Let me see," he said, examining the [illegible] gold.

"Oh," he cried, as I touched it.

"Ah!" I said, on beholding the thumb severely bitten and much inflamed.

He smiled as at, and [illegible]

"Are you not mistaken?"

"Yes. These marks [illegible]

"Mistaken, sir!" [illegible]

"I tell you I am not mistaken."

"Why, sir, you [illegible]

"Stop, coachman!" [illegible]

"Mistaken, sir!"
